RAW in WAR at the Human Rights Watch Film Festival 2012

Closing Night: Where Do We Go Now? + Reception

Friday 30 March 18.30pm at the Ritzy Cinema, Brixton

The Human Rights Watch Film Festival returns to London from 21 - 30 March with a programme packed full of documentaries and dramas set to inspire, inform and trigger debate. This year, in association with Human Rights Watch, and International Alert, RAW in WAR is proud to present the closing gala film – Where Do We Go Now? – prior to its UK theatrical release in summer 2012.

Set against the backdrop of a war-torn country, Where Do We Go Now? tells the heart-warming tale of a group of women determined to protect their isolated, mine-encircled, community from the pervasive and divisive outside forces that threaten to destroy it from within. United by a common cause, the women’s unwavering friendship transcends, against all the odds, the religious fault lines which criss-cross their society and they hatch some extraordinarily inventive, and often comical, plans in order to distract the village’s menfolk and defuse any sign of inter-religious tension. A series of chaotic incidents tests the women’s ingenuity as they manage to successfully stave off the fall-out from the distant war. But when events take a tragic turn, just how far will the women go in order to prevent bloodshed and turmoil?

Courtesy of Revolver Entertainment. People’s Choice Award Toronto International Film Festival 2011

To see the trailer click here. Find out more and book tickets click here.